By what process is ATP formed during glycolysis and the Krebs cycle?

A  rearrangement
B  substrate-level phosphorylation
C  electron transport phosphorylation
D  hydrolysis

During the first two stages of aerobic respiration, four molecules of ATP are generated by substrate-level phosphorylation—the direct transfer of a phosphate group from a substrate of the reactions to ATP.

Answer B.